Foreword

TO US, the Class Book Committee of June 1935, was entrusted the task of getting together a class book. The task was not altogether an easy one, but we, eager though inexperienced, undertook it. This book is the result—Our Monument.

We sincerely hope that this book will bring days and rays of sunshine into your hearts in future years.

ROSE MARIE FUNARO

"Rosie"

October 17, 1917 — Mt. Pleasant School
New Bedford, Mass. — Commercial

The noisiest girl in the class is Rosie for wherever you hear a racket, a carefree laugh, Rosie will always be in the center. She is one of those unusual bright girls and is always willing to help others. May she remain the same.

Class History

By CYNTHIA KUECHLER

"Now the day is over
Night is drawing nigh,
Shadows of the evening
Steal across the sky."

So, too, the shadows of the evening steal across our high school days and bring to a close that part of our life which will always remain as one happy memory. Little do we realize just how great a part our high school days have played in moulding our character and in preparing us to assume the responsibilities which will come to us in the future years. And as we seat ourselves in the auditorium to await with nervousness the time when we are to receive those long struggled-for diplomas, our thoughts drift back to our early high school days.

The first event in the history of our class occurred in the fall of 1931 when we, the class of '35, met for the first time to choose those who were to lead us so successfully through our first year of school. Our officers were: George Redfearne, President; John Rose, Vice-President; Margaret Coggeshall, Secretary; and Doris Eastwood, Treasurer. It was during this first year in New Bedford High School that each one of us set to work individually to lay the foundations which later made us scholars and athletes.

One year later we met again; this time with a little more assurance than previously, to elect our officers for the second year. We elected for our officers Edwin Pinkus, President; Allen Velho, Vice-President; Geraldine Girouard, Secretary; and John Rose, Treasurer.

Our class was greatly honored by having six of its members eligible to join the Honor Society in the Sophomore year. Those students, who because of their high scholastic record and their leadership became members of the society, were: Ruth Abramson, Janice Fisher, Rose Funaro, Marjorie Hagar, Leenda Nassar, and Clara Vieira.

In our Junior year with Weston Figgins as President, Mary West as Vice-President, Cynthia Kuechler as Secretary, and Shirley Loveridge as Treasurer, we continued our studies.

Many of the students of our class won worthy recognition by their admittance to the Honor Society and we were happy to congratulate George Bartlett, Josephine Berube, Charles Bonner, Elsie Costa, George Coury, Edwin Czarnecki, Richard Dalessandro, Elizabeth Jenny, Charlotte Kaplan, Cynthia Kilburn, Edward Kolaczewski, Russell LaFrance, Edna Lassey, Edna Pomfret, Cecelia Quadros, Dorothy Roberts, Ruth Rodriques, Adela Rytelewski, Hilda Silva, Doris Spencer, Lora Stiles, and Allen Velho.

Our first social affair in high school took place in the form of a Junior Prom which was held one warm evening in April. In the boy's gymnasium which had been transformed into a spring garden for the occasion, we had the opportunity to meet for the first time other members of our own class whom we had not known before.

In the fall of 1934, we entered the last year of our high school career and we elected for our class officers Weston Figgins, President; Cynthia Kilburn, Vice-President; Cynthia Kuechler, Secretary; and Shirley Loveridge, Treasurer.

At the same time, the work on the addition of the high school was begun. As the year went by, the smooth walls of the building slowly rose until now we are able to look at its completion with great pride and satisfaction.

A large group of Seniors were selected for membership in the Honor Society and in this group we find Lillian Abramovitz, Irene Austin, Austin Croshere, Weston Figgins, Evelyn Geary, Helen Goldberg, Margaret Haswell, Tillie Horvitz, John Kirk, Mary Lawrence, Leonard LeValley, Hyman Lipman, Emma Millette, Eugene Moorehouse, Nathaniel Stetson, Albina Walecka, Beryl Weller, Mary West, Eleanor White, and Bessie Whittle.

On glancing over our fellow graduates we notice that a large number of the foremost athletes are leaving the school along with us. The football squad will lose many good men with the departure of Joseph Lapierre, Clyde St. Lawrence, Edward Tighe, Homer Poirier, Edwin Czarnecki, and Frank Lawrence.

On the basketball team, our class was nobly represented by such men as Leonard Stephenson, Joseph Lapierre, Edwin Horsfall, Edwin Anton, and Harold Pilkington.

Clyde St. Lawrence, Roland Foster, Allen Velho, Elliot Roberts, Herbert Travers, and Frank Lawrence aided in making up our baseball nine.

On the track team, our members were: Eugene Moorehouse, Joseph Lapierre and John Clayton.

On the golf and tennis teams, we saw, on the former Dexter Horvitz, John Kirk, and Weston Figgins; and on the latter, Joseph Filipek, Weston Figgins, and Arthur Poirier.

We are proud to be able to say that a large group of our classmates were active in other organizations as well as in athletics. Aside from the many other graduates who have done exceptionally well to make our Dramatic Club what it is today, the club will miss the leadership of its four officers: Leonard LeValley, President; Evelyn Geary, Vice-President; Janice Fisher, Secretary; and Leon Braudy, Treasurer.

Likewise our graduating class is dotted here and there with those who have worked zealously for the benefit of the school under the leadership of the Girls' Welfare League. With our class graduates the four officers of the League; Dorothy Jones, President; Mary West, Vice-President; Rachel Pierce, Secretary; and Cynthia Kuechler Treasurer.

And while some of us were busy with dramatics and welfare work, others were equally busy winning recognition in the field of debating. Ruth Silva and Leon Braudy have done splendid work on the debating team which has won the Brown University Debating Cup.

Under the capable hands of some of our graduates, the Traffic Court and the Traffic Squad have become indispensible as well as efficient.

We are justly proud of our graduating R. O. T. C. officers: Sidney Smith, Major; Oman Price, Honorary Major; Kenneth Smith, Captain; Charles Covill, Captain; Robert Riley, Captain; Wilfred Lescarbeau, First Lieutenant; William Parlin, First Lieutenant; Frederick Bowden, First Lieutenant; William Wade, Second Lieutenant; John Santos, Second Lieutenant; and Benjamin Dobson, Second Lieutenant.

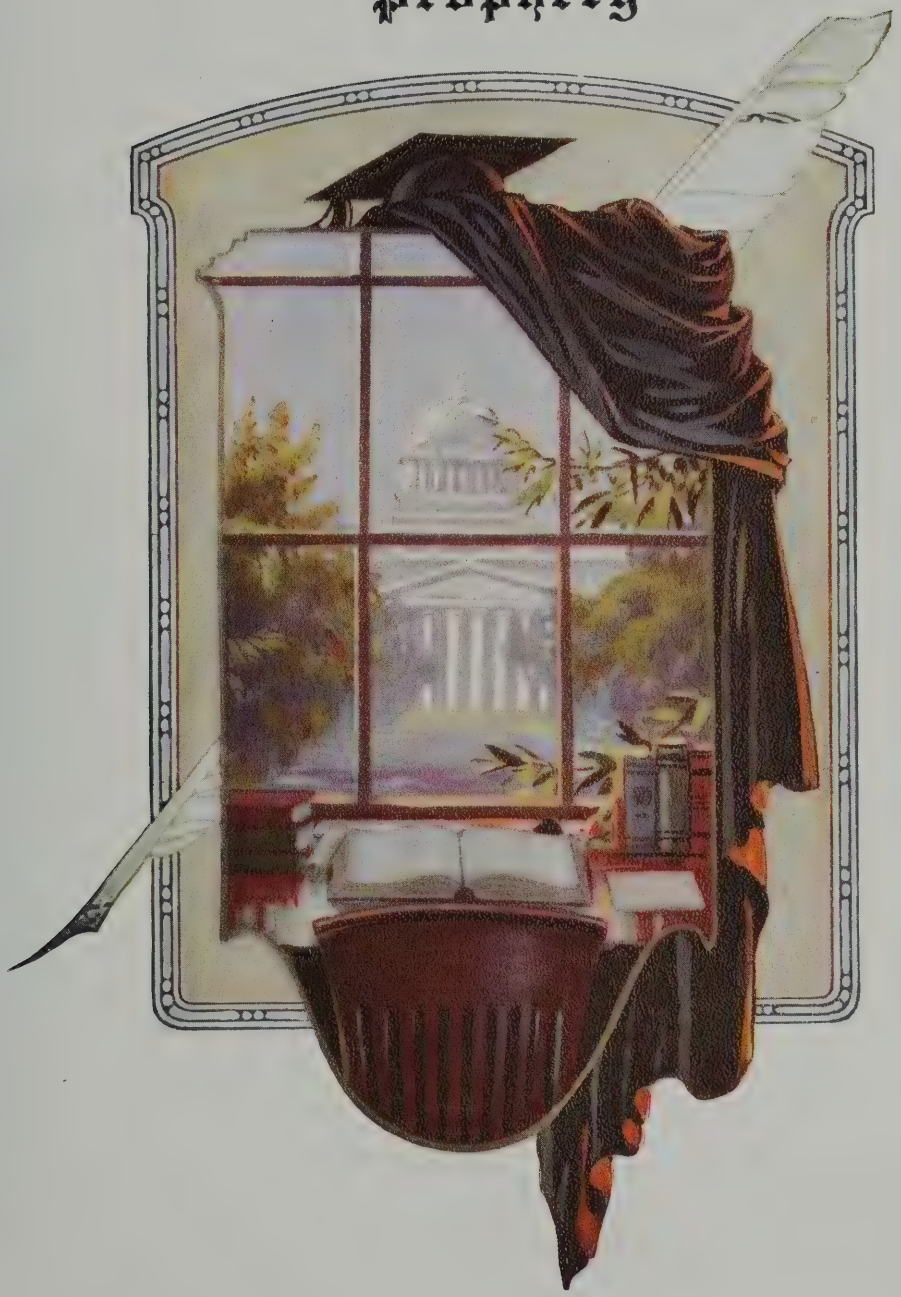
As sponsor, Alice Potter as Honorary Major in the R. O. T. C.

Our thoughts slip back to the fun and the thrill of the last few weeks before graduation. Our class gathered for its banquet at the New Bedford Country Club to hear the toasts and after-dinner speeches and to dance to the music of a splendid orchestra.

It was not many nights later that we met again—this time at the Senior Prom. With pleasant music and laughter in our ears, we enjoyed ourselves immensely and it was with very much difficulty that we tried to live up to the reputation of being "dignified Seniors."

Suddenly a noise interrupts our reveries and we realize that, with diploma in hand, we are to march off the platform for the last time. With graduation over, our high school life is completed and now it is for us to reach for higher accomplishments and attainments in the future. So let us hope that when later years will come with their troubles and disappointments we shall recall our high school career, its pure joys overshadowing the insignificant grievances.

Prophecy



Class Prophecy

The door of Miss Shennan's office opened and much to her surprise, a tall thin man of perhaps thirty-eight or forty entered, wearing a uniform of that peculiar shade of blue that stamped him as an employee of Uncle Sam's Postal Department. Very seriously, yet with a congenial smile, he greeted Miss Shennan and handed her a letter. It was very plain that the teacher was puzzled as to her visitor's identity, but after considerable thought she recognized him as Bill Harwood, of the class of '35.

"Why Bill, I didn't recognize you at first, and yet I knew that you were at the Post Office."

"Oh yes, Miss Shennan, and I have covered so much ground that they have promoted me to handling special mail. I have a very special letter addressed to you."

Miss Shennan was truly surprised, yet more so when she read the following letter:—

June 17, 1955.

Alumnus City, Ohio.

Dear Miss Shennan:—

Twenty years is a long time to have been graduated from High School, and as so many of the members of the class of '35 are located here, we have planned to hold the twentieth reunion in our city on June 20, at 8 P. M. We are anxious to have you and Mr. Williams as our guests. Surely our townspeople will feel it an honor to have you with us, and surely the key of the city will be yours.

A plane has been donated for your transportation through the courtesy of Bill Wade, President of Imperial Airways, and will be at your service at the Municipal Airport, June 18, at 9 A. M.

Don't fail us, as the committee has arranged a most pleasing itinerary for you, and will meet you upon your arrival in our city.

Yours truly,

Weston Figgins, Mayor.

Ethel Berry, Secretary.

Doubt as to accepting this invitation was registered on Miss Shennan's face, but another smile and a little persuasion on Bill's part were effective, and word was sent to Mayor Figgins that both she and Mr. Williams would be only too glad of the chance to be with the members of the illustrious class of '35 once more. Running true to feminine form, the question of what to wear presented itself, but Miss Shennan decided to wait and shop in Alumnus City.

On the morning of the 18th our two passengers arrived at the Municipal Airport a full hour before schedule and found that no other than Frank Grime and Jakie Joanides were to be the pilots of the plane. Of course, introductions were unnecessary even after twenty years, and when Hilda Sowle as hostess, Catherine Burton, as nurse, Emily Texeira, as stenographer and Doris Eastwood, a reporter for the Standard-Times, were presented, it seemed that the reunion had already started.

The whirring of the engine bothered Mr. Williams' hearing, so after supplying him with cotton and Miss Shennan with the latest magazines, including a short story by Lucille Corre, everything was in readiness for the flight. After flying for only a short time, the men folks were so interested in the mechanism of the plane, that conversation was left to the four women.

"Have you seen the new number of "Vogue", Miss Shennan? I know you will enjoy it, as there are models shown by some of the girls in our class. Both Janice Fisher and Cynthia Keuchler are wonderful models, and Gabrielle LaForest surely knows her descriptions of the latest gowns, Ruth Cohen advertises her Knitting Shop, and Eleanor Danis shows her personally designed ear rings."

All this information was indeed interesting and Miss Shennan was most anxious to peruse "Vogue" for herself.

"Why here's a picture of June Lee modeling a hat from Elsie Costa's hat shop, and here's Miss Haswell's Exclusive School for young ladies advertised. Is that the Margaret Haswell that I taught back in 1935?" asked Miss Shennan.

"It surely is," informed the reporter, "and she employs only members of her class at the school. Shirley Loveridge is Dean of the girls, Tillie Horvitz and Winifred Egan, teach French, and no other than Betty Jenny is the counselor, and she surely is successful with the girls and their problems. Martha Bragg is teaching commercial art, and Mary West and Margaret Borden are Chemistry professors. Cecelia Quadros makes a most efficient librarian and Josephine Berube is rated as the best speed typist."

Forward in the cockpit, conversation was running just as high, but along different lines. Above the noise and whine of the engine, Mr. Williams was trying to inquire as to what a certain group of buildings was, and was informed that it was the Covill Military School. Pilot Grimes explained that it was conducted by Charles Covill and Sidney Smith and naturally Mr. Williams was interested, so much so, that he expressed the desire that he might inspect so fine a school. At first this seemed out of the question, but when the pilots realized that there was a landing field connected with the school, they immediately decided to grant Mr. Williams' wish, and have lunch at the same time.

The calibre of Covill Military School was obvious, for as soon as it was evident that the plane was about to land, a force of trained workers under the leadership of Wilfred Lescarbeau, made their appearance, to help in any way possible. Again introductions were unnecessary for both Miss Shennan and Mr. William recognized Eliot Roberts and Roger Normandin, who were to inspect the engine. Edmund Horsfal and James Galligan were recognized as they speedily refueled the plane and again it seemed that the reunion of the class of '35 was gaining momentum.

As our party approached the main buildings, a machine driven by Bill Fuller, entered the driveway and in a few minutes Major Smith alighted resplendent in the glittering gold of his uniform. Carl Lawton and Henry Ras were in attendance as usual, and it was a genuine surprise as our guests met each other. Quite naturally the hospitality of the school was extended and an inspection was arranged.

"You know, Mr. Williams and Miss Shennan, too, it's rather singular, but all the instructors here are graduates of the New Bedford High School, and from the class of '35 too. We rank mighty high and we're mighty proud of our faculty. Robert Riley and Evan Whalley are two of the military instructors while Everett Pendelbury and Kenneth Smith are connected with the Infantry. George Ryder makes a very efficient instructor and Ralph Davis and Benjamin Dobson are just hanging around till they get their pensions."

Just then the telephone rang and the sweet voice of Gertrude Gaudreau could be heard in answer, "Yes, Miss Andrews, just a minute Charlotte and I'll have Leo Goguen page Major Smith."

In short order Major Smith extended an invitation to our guests, to have lunch at the school dining room. Again '35's efficiency in all walks of life showed up, for no other than Oman Price, prepared a wonderful luncheon, which was served most ably by Audrey Spaulding and Sylvia Moura. Over teacups and cigars, plans for the afternoon were talked over and Major Smith pleaded most urgently to plan the evening's entertainment for our travellers. To reach Alumnus City was quite a hop thought the co-pilot, and as Miss Shennan and Mr. Williams seemed agreeable to any suggestion, it was arranged for the proprietors of Covill Military School to be hosts for the evening.

An attendant of the school, Edmund Sylvia, was dispatched to see what was offered at the theatre and in a very short time reported that the five hundred and fortieth performance of the "Cat and the Canary" was to be given at eight-thirty o'clock. Anxious to again see this old favorite, with the original high school actors and actresses, efforts were made to secure tickets for it.

"I'm sorry," answered Bessie Whittle, the telephone operator at the theatre, "the house is sold out."

"But" pleaded the party at the other end of the line, "this is Major Smith, and I've got to have seats for my party from New Bedford."

"New Bedford?" inquired Bessie, "Well, that's different."

"Yes," assured Major Smith, "and they are folks you know, from the class at High School."

"Oh, well, the whole tenth row is theirs, and the show is great, better than twenty years ago."

Joseph Janack and Clifton Morris in the capacity of ushers were more than pleased to renew friendships with their former classmates and teachers. The orchestra under the leadership of Charles Cafferty, played a special number upon the tourists' arrival, and shortly the curtain rose. Although they had all seen the play before, it was interesting to see it put on again for old times' sake.

Again Major Smith disclosed his plans, for he had arranged with Edward McIntyre for hotel accommodations. Marion Tolley, the telephone operator, assured him that the best was none too good for anyone of the class of '35. So after an eventful day chock full of new adventures, surprises in various forms, and a most enjoyable evening, our New Bedford travellers retired, anticipating the morning and their trip to Alumnus City.

The Weather Man might have been one of the '35's too, for the morning dawned with bright fair skies, and at 8.00 A. M. everything was in readiness for the completion of the flight to Alumnus City. Arrangements had been made for breakfast to be served on the plane and it would seem as if the surprises for the day had started. Mr. Williams had not mastered the art of flying in one day, so again he chose the cockpit as his place and Miss Shennan was busily engaged in conversation with the attendants of the plane.

In a surprisingly short time, the distance to Alumnus City was covered and the landing field was sighted. Again, an able crew made up of Joe Furtado, Lewis Cohen, and Homer Poirier helped land the plane, while Bert Sward promised that he and Roland Bennedetti would see that the plane was properly hangared. The reception committee, comprising Clyde St. Lawrence, acting Mayor, Bill Parlin of the City Council, Rachel Pierce and Alice Potter, social workers were eagerly waiting to extend the greetings of Alumnus City. Of course Fred Osuch, star reporter of the Alumnus Herald, and Tony Britto, press photographer, were very much in evidence. The Mayor's car, with Richard Dalesandro as chauffeur and George Bartlett in attendance was in waiting, as well as others supplied by Charles Nealy, and soon the visitors were enroute for Mayor Figgins' office.

On the outskirts of the city, a large produce farm was noted, operated by Manuel Borges, and Arthur Poirier. Tourists cabins, under the direction of Frances Camara and Lydia Wagstaff, were seemingly well patronized, and our visitors were glad of their prosperity. At the side of the road a familiar sight appeared in the form of engine trouble, to which Alfred Bessette was giving expert attention, while Edmund Brown, the driver interfered with useless questions.

Another few miles and the business section of Alumnus City could be seen. The several cars made quite a procession and the occupants were busily engaged in viewing the center. A most up to date drug store, under the proprietorship of Harold Duerden and Alvah Shurtleff presented itself on the right, while situated directly next to it, in a most neighborly sort of way, was the tonsorial parlor of Andre Deschiens and Carlos Amaral. A little further along and on the opposite side of the street was a most unusual shop devoted to pets. One could hardly miss it for it boldly flaunted a sign that vividly declared that Helen Goldberg and Irene McGowan owned and operated the same. The delicatessen store of Siegfried Antosch next door caused considerable laughter as to whether he catered to the pets or their owners.

Miss Shennan had just noticed a very unique store called "Dot Jones' Book Shop for Children" and had asked if she couldn't visit it later when the grinding of brakes, the sound of shattering glass and a piercing scream made everyone realize that something had happened. The chauffeur of the Mayor's car made immediate investigation and found that Jack Kirk had jumped the red light and had side-swiped the large car.

"Say, what's the big idea? Don't you know the difference between red and green, yet? You'll get into trouble someday. Never mind the excuses, and trouble may be right here, for take a look at this lady you've knocked down." The chauffeur was really angry.

A large crowd gathered in no time and only the arrival of Traffic Officer Bill Jackson, who calmly told Kirky that this second offense would be handled in court, made Jack realize what damage he had done.

It was most unfortunate that any accident should occur, particularly at this time, but the Mayor's chaffeur insisted that the party continue to the Municipal Building, leaving all details of the accident in charge of James Foley, Chief of Police, who had arrived on the scene. Chief Foley disliked very much to tell Mr. Williams that he would have to appear in court that afternoon as a material witness and disliked to call an ambulance for nothing more than a slight gash, but the nurse of our party in taking charge of the injured person, insisted that her wound be treated at the hospital.

The siren of the ambulance announced its arrival and David Foster, the driver, was proud of his quick response. The two attendants, Fred Bowden and Albert Cassidy, gently lifted the victim to their stretcher and a knowing look passed between them as they recognized Doris Hathaway.

"Why I didn't know that she lived in Alumnus City," said Cassidy.

"Oh, yes," answered Bowden, "and she holds a fine position, Secretary to Ruth Silva, our congresswoman. Tough luck she was knocked down, but they'll fix her up O.K. at the hospital."

Hardly had this conversation ended, when the ambulance came to a stop at the entrance and two of the hospital attendants, Robert Michelson and Joseph Harrington, appeared on the scene ready to lend a helping hand. No help was needed and swiftly our patient was borne to the examination room, exclaiming all the while that she was all right. Drs. Breault and Maxim decided differently, and Alice Swallow was ordered to get everything ready in the operating room. Soon Emeline Lester, still chewing gum, administered enough ether and Dr. Charles Bonnar deftly applied four or five of his famous stitches.

In a comparitively short time, as hospitals reckon time, Doris had come out of the ether and was wheeled into the sunroom where an hour or two of relaxation had been ordered. Much to her surprise she recognized two of the patients, Alice Gidley, whose horse had refused to take a higher hurdle a couple of days previous, and Everett Isherwood, who was nursing second degree burns as a result of an explosion at his hot dog stand.

"Well, there is quite a crowd of us. I don't know but what we could hold our twentieth reunion here," remarked another nurse, Alice Dubramski, as she came to check up on her other patients.

"Don't count on me," answered Doris, "as I have an appointment with Margaret Coggeshall, head of the Social Service of our city. She's doing wonderful work and has quite a staff under her. Edna Pomfret and Ruth Rodriques are assigned to one section of the city; Charlotte Kaplan and Norma Humphrey are detailed at the day nursery and Mary Sachs is doing child work."

"But before you go, Miss Hathaway, you'll have to go through the ordinary red tape," informed Miss Dubranski, "so I'll ring for Edna Lassey, the hospital stenographer, and then we will have you see Allan Velho, the superintendent, for your proper dismissal."

Excitement reigned at the Municipal Building, for the hour of our guests arrival had been broadcast the night before by Dexter Horvitz, who operates his own studio. Chester Koczwara, faithful attendant, proudly cleared the corridor to Mayor Figgin's office and our guests were truly glad to escape from the crowds, but were just as glad to see some of their old pupils who had gathered as an official welcoming committee. James Wordell, Superintendent of Schools; Marjorie Hagar Dean of Alumnus College; Joseph Filipek, Superintendent of Public Works; John Clayton, President of Alumnus National Bank; and Rosemarie Loftus, Professor of Latin, were a few of those present.

Mayor Figgins extended hearty greetings and started on one of his usual speeches, "It is my proud pleasure to welcome you to Alumnus City and to extend to you its hospitality. Our city is a model one, and this morning's itinerary includes a trip through our newspaper plant, and luncheon. We're leaving the afternoon for you folks to do as you please and this evening Henry Coury, the city's play boy, will escort us all to the club after an evening at the theatre. I hope this will meet with your approval. We have plenty planned for tomorrow."

Mr. Williams and Miss Shennan just looked at each other but were very willing to agree to all the plans. Mayor Figgins directed Marion Reddy, his office girl, to have Harriet Steward, the telephone operator, call the Alumnus Star to see if Elmer Page, the editor, was ready to conduct the tour of Inspection.

No sooner said than done; Elmer arrived at the office and in his typical happy-go-lucky way, soon put everyone in an easy frame of mind, as he conducted the crowd to Alumnus Star building. Here they met Ned Tighe, office manager, busily engaged in dictating to Alice Rabin, his stenographer, Mary Armstrong and Beatrice Gradwell were busy at filing cabinets and Grace Demoranville continuously answered calls at the switchboard while William Murphy and Pantages Paulos were busy at the counter taking care of the newsboys with their collections.

"Well," remarked Mr. Williams, "this seems to be a pretty busy place. Let's journey on."

"Oh, you ain't seen nothing yet," answered Elmer. Page was surely proud of his newspaper plant and escorted the visitors to the press room, where Edward McBride, held full charge.

"It's impossible for us to talk," he announced, "while the presses are running, but I'll see you at the reunion, and do have Mr. Page tell you of all the folks working here." Back to work for Micky, but Elmer pointed out the men who could be seen working in different capacities: James Miziazek, Clifton Keuchler, Ray Lamarre, Everett Lipson and Everett Parker, could be seen working over the thundering machinery so that the special edition could go out.

The photo-engraving room was next to be visited and one could sense how proud Elmer was when he presented Edwin Czarnecki, head of the department. Other inspections were suggested but Mr. Williams replied that he was scheduled to appear in court at 2 P. M. and that he invariably ate lunch near midday.

"Oh, I could keep you busy all afternoon right here, but you must come to my office for there's a picture that I want you to see," and pride beamed on Elmer's face. As they passed through the corridor, enroute to the editor's office, Pauline O'Brien was seen hurrying from one office to another but was very glad to greet her former teachers, whom she recognized at once.

"All set for reunion tomorrow night?" she inquired and Miss Shennan's reply was to the effect that it had been nothing but a reunion so far.

The picture in Editor Page's office proved to be one of the personnel of the newspaper and it was easy to recognize John Downey, Manager; Gilbert Collins, Circulation Manager; Joaquin Azevedo, Sports writer in collaboration with Harold Pilkington.

"Who's this girl? She looks like Virginia Wilde," inquired Miss Shennan.

"It is Virginia, and she runs a special column of motor boat activities," supplied Elmer. "Jessie Raphael heads our art department, Emma Millette contributes poetry and Rose Funaro conducts a column pertaining to etiquette."

Our guests were just leaving the editor's office when they were attracted by a group that seemed like another reception committee, so cordial were their greetings. Editor Page insisted on introducing this group which included Raymond Durant, cartoonist; Eleanor White editor of the Heart Throb Column; Stella Isdepski, reporter and Grace Davidian, writer for the children's page. This group insisted on a visit to the composing room, where they met Anita Ghilhardi busily gossiping for the paper, and Adele Rytlewski typing the latest society news.

Our little party wandered over to a large desk, at which sat Frances Kinniery, dictating to Fern Allen, the directions for making lemon meringue pie; the recipe was for her column, "Handy Housewife's Helper." After exchanging greetings, Mr. Williams looked at his watch and insisted that they leave in order to keep their luncheon engagement.

The Mayor's chauffeur was patiently waiting and in quick time—almost too quick for Miss Shennan's comfort—drove to Mary Lawrence's Tea Room. After checking their wraps with Ruth Thatcher, they entered the dining room and Miss Shennan recognized Beatrice Allain, head waitress, who escorted them to a most desirable table and placed them in charge of Irene Jackson.

"How about a nice salad, sir," suggested Beatrice. "Hilda Ferreira makes delicious salads, and I know you'll enjoy it." So salad it was. While they were waiting for their order to be filled, Mr. Williams remarked that the voice at the next table sounded familiar and after making inquiries, through the waitress, learned that the lady in question was none other than Nancy Shields, a wealthy philanthropist, who had made large gifts to Alumnus College, which was close by.

"Well, well, I surely would like to visit the college," remarked Mr. Williams, and would have arranged it for that same afternoon, had not Miss Shennan reminded him of his court appearance at 2.30. "And while you are at court, I'm going shopping, for I know there must be some splendid shops here and tomorrow we can both visit Alumnus College."

Thus our guests went their separate ways and soon Miss Shennan was window shopping along the main street. "Why here's a book shop owned by Hyman Lipman," mused she and in a few minutes was attracted to the window of a certain store where they made doughnuts exclusively. A sign announced its owner to be Noelle Dubuque; Lillian Abramovitz was a very busy clerk inside.

Alumnus City patronized its Clear Weave Hosiery Shop managed by Hazel Swanson with Eleanor Kesslner and Lena Miller as clerks. Its Fanny Famer's with Virginia Bowen as proprietor did a rushing business, for Dorothy Lancaster and Marion Reed were most popular clerks.

At the corner, Traffic Officer Bernard Nolan almost tied up traffic, as he recognized Miss Shennan crossing the street and both Charles Francis and Lester Crossley left their gasoline station in order to see their teacher of High School days. Harold Gartzman, who had been filling up, surely received his money's worth of gas for once, as he nonchalanty filled up his own tank.

As Miss Shennan wended her way among other shoppers, she noticed an exclusive dress shop and decided to enter. Much to her surprise and delight she learned that Janet Aillery was the owner, ably assisted by Mary Holmstrom and Sylvia Manelis.

"Look around all you wish, Miss Shennan, and my girls will be glad to show you the very latest in styles in both afternoon and evening dresses. Of course, I'll see you at the reunion tomorrow,. and I think it will be splendid to meet all our classmates once more."

"By the way, Janet," said Miss Shennan, "could you recommend a really good beauty salon? ? I'd like to get fixed up a little, if we are stepping out both tonight and at the reunion tomorrow night."

"Yes, indeed," answered Miss Aillery, "I know just the place. Mary Backus owns her own shop and has the very best operators. Both Cecilia Texeira and Eleanor Nye give a dandy wave and Doris Openshaw is the best manicurist in town. Shall I telephone for an appointment? They'll be glad to see you and besides Louise Osuch is at the cash desk. Oh, the class of '35 is well represented in Alumnus City!"

As Miss Shennan found her way to the Santos Block and waited for the elevator, she was most agreeably surprised to recognize the operator, Thurston Perry, who reminised of New Bedford days 'til reaching the fourth floor. He gave her directions to Mary Backus' Beauty Ship and knew that our visitor would be in good hands.

In the meantime, Mr. Williams had made his way to the court house and met John Santos, who was justly proud of his position as janitor. Chatting for a few minutes, Santos advised that Lawyer Lloyd Whipple was just inside the court room and as Mr. Williams entered he was greeted by Deputy Sheriff Stanley Goldstein who proceeded to find a good seat. Mr. Williams however, chose to remain in the background with Whipple. Judge Cynthia Kilburn presiding at the bench, was as sober and serious as the proverbial judge, as she upheld an objection offered by Leon Braudy the defense attorney. The case of Albert Hartley, under suspicion of misappropriation of child welfare funds, proved interesting as Charles Latham continued his gruelling cross examination.

In spite of his interest in the case, Mr. Williams recognized Leonard Stephenson, foreman of the jury, as well as several of the jurors. Evelyn London, Herbert Travers, Mary Manning and Ernest Schweidenback. Seated at the press table, were Edward Ponichtera, Melvin LaBrode and Jeanette Hearst, feverishly taking notes for their respective papers, but they couldn't better the speed of Gertrude Lipman, Court Stenographer. Surely, she showed her early commercial training as she expertly recorded the testimony of Pearl Stupnitski.

The second witness, Loretta Rainville, testified at length and a growing uneasiness as to his own appointment, caused Mr. Williams to realize that something was amiss. The testimony of the next witness, Helen Clayton, proved too interesting so Mr. Williams lingered on. Inquiring of Edward Anton, a fellow spectator, he learned that the lower court was two blocks away, and hurridly made his exit, under the glare of Daniel Meal, Clerk of the Court.

When our guests returned to Mayor Figgins' office, they learned that John Rose, President of the Chamber of Commerce, had extended an invitation to dinner at the Alumnus City Country Club.

"This is a lovely surprise, John," remarked Miss Shennan, "and I know we shall enjoy dining with you. Just tell me the time and I'll be ready for I surely love surprises."

As both she and Mr. Williams left the group to go to their hotel, Rose was heard to remark, "Well there are plenty of surprises in store, for I have left all details of the dinner to Barbara Hilton and she has planned plenty."

Dinner at the club proved most enjoyable, and when Miss Hilton presented a group of young ladies in a special musical number, it was indeed a surprise for the group was composed of no others than Ilene Ramsbottom, Beatrice St. Pierre, Katherine Welsh and Evelyn Taber. At a nearby table was an attractive foursome including Gerry Girouard and Malvina Cunha with their escorts, who immediately recognized our guests and it would seem as if the reunion were under way at the Country Club.

By previous arrangement, Henry Coury arrived exactly at eight P. M. and in his typical breezy way announced that he was to take charge of the party and that they were all to attend the theatre where "Life Begins at 8.40" was playing. Rose Breault and Leon LeValley had splendid leading parts, while Carolyn Gidley was in fine voice, but the hit of the evening was Edith King and Ray Russo as they played their comedy together.

The orchestra under the able leadership of Harry Roberts seemed to outdo itself and the chorus never seemed to execute their numbers any better than this evening. Mr. Williams seemed to be enjoying the performance. He inquired, "Who is that girl on the left end of the chorus?"

"Why don't you know?" asked Henry, "she is Geraldine Cormier of the class of '35. In fact you should know all of the chorus for there are Edna Mort, Grace Collins, Alice Gendron, Irene Austin, Evelyn Geary, and Leonora Gracia. Good looking bunch, aren't they?" Mr. Williams agreed and continued to enjoy the performance.

As the final curtain lowered, the audience was most generous in its applause, so much so, that Claire Surprenant sang a special number dedicated to our guests, and they were indeed proud of the class of '35.

From here our group proceeded to the "High Hat" a most swanky night club where Lora Stiles made a very charming hostess. Here Joseph Lapierre proved a real Master of Ceremonies as he introduced Gladys Kinyon and Ceslawa Augustyn, dancers; Jessie Horn, blues singer; and Charlotte Chaskes in a specialty number. These numbers were most entertaining and loud applause from a nearby group including Emma Tripp and Irma Gregorie brought added pleasure.

Greetings were exchanged and as Dot Roberts made her way in and out of the tables speedily selling her varied brands of cigarettes, our guests realized what a versatile class, 1935 was.

'Twas in the wee small hours of the morning when our party broke up, and when Mayor Figgins announced that nothing had been planned for the morning both Miss Shennan and Mr. Williams could be heard almost to heave a sigh of, shall we say, relief? For never had they put in a busier, longer and more varied day in their life.

"I surely will be glad to rest in the morning," remarked Mr. Williams, "glad to catch up with my sleep, but I do want to visit that college that we spoke of."

"Yes, indeed, Mr. Williams," answered Weston, "we have planned an inspection at 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon."

And exactly at two, a group of prominent citizens accompanied our guests to Alumnus College where President Clara Viera graciously met them and made arrangements to visit the different departments. Nat Stetson, Russell LaFrance and Edward Izmirian were still a chemistry trio, while Gene Moorehouse headed the mathematic department. The commercial division under the supervision of Helen Widelski was most successful, while other teachers included Mary Magagna, Commercial English; Leenda Nassar, Librarian; Doris Spencer and Francis Schofield, History. Alumnus City College was most proud of its course in dramatic art and under the direction of Professor Janet Shaw proved most popular with the students, Constance Weller and Bernice Walder were justly proud of the attendance at their classes as they jointly lectured on current events and economics, and Hazel Sowle, instructor in elocution assisted by Jennie Allison were always a help in this department. Harold Pilkington made a splendid physical instructor and was ever willing to sing the praises of his basketball team.

Our guests truly marvelled at so many members of one class to comprise the faculty of one school and Miss Shennan frankly admitted, "I guess, Mr. Williams, we didn't thoroughly appreciate this class twenty years ago."

As President Viera led her guests back to her reception room, conversation quite naturally led to the reunion at night time, but no plans were disclosed as the committee had been most secretive. Another surprise soon opened up however, when tea was served most graciously by Albina Wolecka and Rita Couet. At last, adieus were made as everyone seemed anxious to rest a little before the reunion and as Mr. Williams left the college, one could see that he was filled with pride for his former pupils.

Upon arriving at her room, Miss Shennan received a telephone call, stating that a hair dressing demonstration was being given in the beauty salon of the Hotel. Almost too tired to be interested, our guest finally decided to attend, thinking of a possible new coiffure for the evening. Much to her surprise and pleasure, too, she recognized Arnold Ramalho deftly arranging the tresses of Josephine Ochab, while two of his operators, Pearl Sher and Stephane Drudzien looked on with keen interest in the hopes of absorbing all that was being shown. Esther Grey, very ably booked appointments, as the demonstration was proving very popular.

As the reunion of the class of '35 was to be held in the banquet hall of the hotel, no arrangements for transportation had to be made, but our committee, the class officers of twenty years ago, was on hand early to see that everything was in readiness and to greet our guests when they arrived.

The committee seemed a little worried, wondering why at least some of the members of the class had not arrived early and when Miss Shennan and Mr. Williams entered the banquet hall, one could notice on their faces too, wonderment as to so few folk already arrived. Just then the telephone rang in spite of closing the door of the telephone booth our guests could hear the following conversation:

"Hello, Bud Croshere? How's chances for a game of tennis?" "Oh I'd like to well enough," answered Bud, "but I'm tied up with the Class Prophecy. I've got to plan the menue for the Twentieth Reunion." The voice on the other end of the wire rang with laughter and louder still could be heard "Aw forget it, that's twenty years from now. No time like the present, so let's get agoing. I'll be seeing you in half an hour." "OK," answered Bud, and within the half hour on court number 2 of Buttonwood Park, a set of tennis was in progress.
